

Cornell Cooperative Extension, an educational organization supported by county, state, and federal governments, links Cornell University and the U.S. Department of Agriculture with every community in New York State. Knowledge is disseminated through an extensive program that includes workshops, personal contacts, television, radio, teleconferencing and a wide variety of publications. The knowledge base is the research of faculty and staff of Cornell University and the nationwide land-grant system.

Volunteers play an important part in Extension's Outreach and Education Programs. If you are interested in volunteering, please let us know. Opportunities are available in the program areas of Human Ecology, Community Resource Development, Agriculture and 4-H.

Human Ecology consumer calls are answered from 9:00 am - 1:00 pm,
Monday through Friday.

Master Gardeners are available to answer your gardening questions from 9:00 am - 1:00 pm, Monday through Friday.
